service of the Civil War. With this part of of his life are connected many thrilling scenes which Miss Mary Jane Moore is up on mark the career of a true soldier. All that is past and another veteran has sunk to that sleep over which the Southern willows mourn and the Northern roses weep. He was a member of the M. E

Church South, and possessed that gentle spirit which makes a good hushand, loving father and a generous neighbor who is worthy of the admiration of his fellow men. Since no encomium can minister to the dead, let tender memo-ries embalm his virtues, a richer pay. Though his body rests beneath the sod, his soul is walking the streets of paradise; for as the aqueous vapors of some gentle river are lifted into the skies by the morning sun, the Christian soul is raised by the soft hands of angels into the glorious sanlight of God. So great are God's promises that, doubtless, the tears we shed are borne by invisible hands to the sinless land where they are converted into showers of blessings. Then bleeding heart be consoled by Christ's victories of death, in which our beloved live. A FRIEND.
